Briefly, the facts in the case are these: On Tuesday evening last an apparently elderly lady, very well and tastefully dressed, and intelligent and amiable looking, was observed seated in the snow on Seventh street, in this city. On aproaching and speaking to her, it was evident that she was suffering from a serious aberration of mind. She was of or so reason seemed to have resumed its at prices to suit the times. place. While upon the Baltimore and Ohio the fluid. Railroad her husband was attacked with hemorrhage of the lungs. So dangerous did his condition seem that it was deemat a station called Sykesville, some thirty-two miles west of Baltimore.

Here, she says, he was taken into a public house upon which was the sign 'Miller's Hotel,' and which was presided over by a robust looking man who was familiarly addressed by his acquaintances as 'Jo.' Physicians were called in who gave the invalid the benefit of their knowledge, and the flow of blood was stopped. He seemed to be in a fair way of recovery, but in a day or two he was again attacked, and died in about fifteen minutes-and the next day he was buried.

Overcome with grief at her great loss, she concluded to prosecute the journey no Louis the next morning.
